Category:EpsonSenator Blanche Lincoln's bill to make private equity firms "personally liable" for executive pay abuses is finally going to a vote. The Senate Banking committee will begin discussing the bill, of course, and is expected to vote at some point during the session before the November election. But the timing is up to the Banking Committee chair, Chris Dodd, who appears to be giving political cover to Lincoln by calling on all of the other committee members to hold off on a vote until the Senate is back in session in December, and before November 2. The idea of forcing big private equity firms to act responsibly is a good one. But the Blanche Lincoln bill, which has been floating around Congress for some time, is actually a watered-down version of the original bill originally sponsored by Ron Wyden and John McCain. So the bill doesn't do anything really meaningful to make private equity firms and their executives accountable for executive pay abuses. In fact, there's a chance it makes things worse. The bill as passed by the banking committee would impose maximum 15% excise tax on the performance and personal compensation of private equity managers, as well as any "participant" in any private equity fund that is publicly traded. Under the bill, a "participant" is an individual or company that owns at least 10% of the equity of a private equity fund. Meanwhile, the bill would require that the private equity manager, in the event that the fund is sold, either gives up ownership of the fund to the new owner or sells his or her performance share to the new owner at its fair market value.
